RE: Conditional Use Permit # R2015-02506-(2), RCUP201500105
10801 HAWTHORNE BLVD WITHIN LENNOX ZONED DISTRICT

Dear Vice Chair Smith:

I would like to provide this report to you with regard to CUP application #R2015-02506-(2), RCUP201500105, which is a request for an existing 7-Eleven convenience store located at 10801 Hawthorne Blvd, to be permitted to sell beer and wine for off-site consumption.

The current 7-Eleven store has been operating in the Lennox community since October 2014. The store is equipped with the new design features, which includes increased lighting, lower shelves, wider aisles and less clutter. Not to mention the new gourmet coffee bar and the line of fresh to go foods which include freshly packed sandwiches, wraps, fruit and veggie snacks.

Over the past 7 years 7-Eleven has been transforming itself from a traditional convenience store to a neighborhood store. As a neighborhood store, 7-Eleven incorporates the community into their business model. Our current franchisee has hired local residents as his employees and has supported several local events including; $1,800 in food and beverages and $1,200 in coupons the 2015 and 2016 Lennox Cinco de Mayo Parade, Coffee, Water and Bananas to the Lennox Library Open Mic Night, $711 and $250 in product to Jefferson Elementary School, $711 and $500 in product to Lennox Academy and $711, $250 in product and $500 in coupons to Moffett Elementary School to name a few.

As a neighborhood store, the main concern for 7-Eleven has been and continues to be safety. 7-Eleven is known for being the "eyes and ears" of the community. 7-Eleven integrates a high-resolution, surveillance-camera system into their business. This includes 24-hour closed-circuit video with audio capabilities. They are also equipped with a sophisticated alarm system that would allow employees to contact 911 through the touch of a remote activated device. All employees are trained to report any suspicious or dangerous activity.

Although the store does not currently sell beer or wine, 7-Eleven considers it a privilege to sell age-restricted products such as tobacco and lottery tickets. 7-Eleven makes it a priority to be an establishment that promotes responsible retailing. The cash registers are equipped to require the swipe of a valid identification whenever an age-restricted product is scanned for sale. 7-Eleven participates in a secret shoppers program in which the store is visited monthly to ensure that the store complies with lawful sales procedures.

We believe that by expanding our retail mix to include beer and wine it allows 7-Eleven to keep its commitment to meeting all of the convenience needs of our customers. 7-Eleven has something for everyone. It is our goal to continue our commitment to the customers of our neighborhood 7-11 by offering a complete and varied product line in a responsible and safe manner.

In keeping with the commitment to the community we engaged in an outreach effort that included residents, businesses, schools, elected officials, and churches immediately surrounding the existing store. Enclosed you will find a letter on behalf of the Lennox Library and 181 support cards from local residents within 600ft of the existing store. It is our hope that these ties will continue to strengthen and expand as the store continues to serve the community.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

OPEN AROUND THE CLOCK

At 7-Eleven, a 24-hour operation is one of the cornerstones of our business. It's what customers expect of us... and we want to fulfill their expectations. It's also part of our commitment to serving the communities where we do business.

The American work routine has changed. People are busier, work later and are in need of products and services at all hours. More jobs require late-night or early-morning schedules. Many U.S. factories run around the clock with three full shifts. Americans are staying up later and getting up earlier, and they need a convenient place to shop. They may range from truck and taxi drivers to police and firefighters, to utility workers and hospital and manufacturing employees. They are parents with sick children and travelers who simply need a cup of hot coffee.

7-Eleven's simple act of opening stores around the clock was a pioneering move in the retail arena. Over the years, thousands of our competitors... as well as other retail operations... grocery stores, drug stores... and even fitness centers... have followed suit. Our customers have the perception that 7-Eleven is there for them. We want them to trust that when they drive up to a 7-Eleven store – no matter what time it is – we will be open to meet their needs. The 7-Eleven trademark is synonymous with being open 24hrs a day/7days a week. It is what our customers expect of us, and we want to fulfill their expectations. If a 7-Eleven store is closed during the late-night hours, customers will be confused about its operating hours and will seek other stores to meet their convenience needs. Experience has taught us that there is a loss of sales at other times of the day if a 24-hour store reduces its hours of operation.

7-Eleven provides employment opportunities at night for those who want a second job; attend school during the day, or who want to work hours similar to their spouse working a late-night shift.

The late-night shift provides the store staff a chance to do tasks that are difficult to complete during the busier day hours, including cleaning, ordering, restocking, facing shelves, and accepting deliveries. With more than 1,000 customers a day visiting each 7-Eleven store, it's not easy to find the time to do these necessary chores.

Sociologist Murray Melbin reports that 10 million people in this country are up at 3 a.m. and 7 million of them are working. They include: firefighters, police officers, nurses, doctors and ambulance drivers, newspaper, TV and radio crews, postal workers, printers and overnight photo lab employees, manufacturing night-shift workers, stockbrokers, home health care workers, people working from their homes, such as computer programmers and writers, military installation personnel, computer operators at high-tech firms, law office and corporate word processors, cooks, chefs and bakers, delivery truck drivers (newspaper and bread), long-distance truck drivers, customer service line representatives, street and highway maintenance crews, telephone and utility repair personnel, government workers, hotel and motel employees, limo, taxi, school and other bus drivers, casino employees, security guards, office cleaning service workers, private security patrols, emergency hotline workers, people "on call", musicians, actors and other entertainers.

We are asleep. They are not. They are earning their livelihood. Our night is their day. These people need services through the night and to and from work, just as you and I need and use these services in the daytime.

7-Eleven spends millions of dollars to provide a safe working and shopping environment through its Operation Alert and customer-service training programs; by maintaining low cash availability; keeping windows clear; remodeling its stores, which includes increased lighting, lower shelves, wider aisles and less clutter; and the installation of a high-resolution, closed-circuit camera system, audio monitoring and an alarm system. 7-Eleven continues to review other security measures and participates in convenience-store security research projects. 7-Eleven also has a good, working relationship with local law enforcement agencies and supports many crime-prevention and community policing projects.

INTERVIEW

ASSET PROTECTION IN A CONVENIENCE-STORE ENVIRONMENT

A CONVERSATION
WITH MARK STINDE OF 7-ELEVEN

By James Lee, LPC, Executive Editor

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mark Stinde is vice president of asset protection for 7-Eleven, Inc. He has over 24 years of experience in loss prevention, safety, and store operations management roles for various retailers, including Circuit City, Sears Holdings, The Home Depot, Toys "R" Us, and others. Stinde serves on the Asset Protection Leadership Council for the Retail Industry Leaders Association and the editorial board of LP Magazine, and has been active in many other LP trade organizations.

EDITOR: I'm sure most of our readers have visited a 7-Eleven store at some point, if not on a daily basis. How widespread is 7-Eleven today?

STINDE: The brand of 7-Eleven has grown to over 50,000 stores worldwide in sixteen countries. In the United States and Canada, which is specifically my area of responsibility, we have more than 8,000 stores. Just last year we grew by close to 1,000 stores. Obviously, we have a heavy focus on convenience. However, our goal is not only to be the best convenience-store retailer in the world, but also the best retail company in the world. We are known as a beacon in the night for our customers, or guests as we call them, who are looking for a place to get a cup of coffee, a cold drink, or something good to eat at any time of the day or night.

EDITOR: Who are your typical customers?

STINDE: For some guests, we're their neighborhood grocery store. For others, we're just that convenient place where they get a meal, a cold drink, gasoline, or a Slurpee® beverage.

EDITOR: Ah, the Slurpee. What's the story behind that?

STINDE: Years ago, the owner of one of our stores had the idea that if he took the syrup that is used to make fountain drinks and chilled it, that it would freeze and make a great product. He tried it actually using a car air-conditioning unit the first time, and it worked. That product is what we know as the Slurpee today.

EDITOR: Before we go in-depth into your current role, tell our readers how you got into loss prevention originally?

STINDE: I came home to Federal Way, Washington, from school one summer and needed a part-time job. I responded to an ad for hourly associates at a Mervyns store and took a job in their shoe department as a salesman. I stayed there for a couple of years. While I was there the LP staff often asked me to assist in apprehensions. Eventually, the LP district manager, Mark Thomas, asked me if I had any interest in loss prevention. He was very instrumental in my career. So,

I interviewed and took a role as a store detective in a new store in Puyallup, Washington, and my LP career was born.

EDITOR: And that career has taken you to work for what other companies?

STINDE: I spent seven years with Mervyns, and then took an opportunity with a company called Lamonts Apparel in the Northwest as a loss prevention investigator. I was promoted within the year to shrinkage control manager, and then about a year later to regional LP manager. When they filed for bankruptcy in 1995, I went to Toys "R" Us for three years, then to Home Depot where I spent a total of seven years.

A couple of opportunities with Home Depot that gave me experience outside of the LP arena, were the roles I held as senior director of safety and as district manager of operations. The role in safety was very fulfilling, and we made huge progress as an organization not only in the area of safety, but also in the area of environmental compliance. Two years after taking the safety role, the company decided to move safety back into loss prevention. My division president offered me a district manager role in operations in St. Louis.

Most people think of 7-Eleven as a small-box retail store and think that the issues we face are scaled down the same way. But we do a lot of things in our stores and face some complex issues. We sell food items, which involves food-safety issues. We sell tobacco products, which come with regulatory concerns. We sell gasoline that comes with environmental challenges. On top of that, we're a 24-hour operation that brings in guests at all hours of the day and night, which presents a number of issues.

I spent two years there before the LP bug bit me again.

At that point I went to Sears as division vice president of full-line stores. I was at Sears for a short time when Circuit City recruited me for the top LP role. I started as the director, but was promoted to vice president eight months later. I was with Circuit City until they closed in the spring of 2009. The bankruptcy wasn't fun to go through, but it was a huge learning opportunity for me. When they went out of business, I worked for Protiviti as the associate director of the loss prevention practice for a year and a half before I got the phone call from 7-Eleven.

EDITOR: What enticed you to go to a convenience-store-type operation?

STINDE: When I first learned of the opportunity, I asked questions like: Is it a growth company? Do they have a good strategy? What's the leadership like? Would this be a place that I would want to spend some years of my career? Can I make an impact? After my research, I knew that it was a great company. I also thought that it was a great opportunity to bring some ideas and best practices from the LP industry into their asset protection program to make it even better. 7-Eleven had always had a senior director of loss prevention, but never a vice president. I came in as senior director and within a year was promoted to vice president.

EDITOR: How is loss prevention at a convenience store different from a traditional retail store?

STINDE: Most people think of 7-Eleven as a small-box retail store and think that the issues we face are scaled down the same way. But we do a lot of things in our stores and face some complex issues. We sell food items, which involves food-safety issues. We sell tobacco products, which come with regulatory concerns. We sell gasoline that comes with environmental challenges. On top of that, we're a 24-hour operation that brings in guests at all hours of the day and night, which presents a number of issues.

So, as I came into the company, it didn't take me long to understand that it's a complex business model even though it's a small store. And I've always believed that even though my function within the company—asset protection—is a support function, the best way for me to do my job is to have a true understanding of what it takes to operate the business. In fact, in my first ninety days with the company, I spent sixty days in a store learning the business, all the way from how you order donuts to how you clean the grill to food temperature expectations. The operational knowledge that I gained early on helped equip me to better manage asset protection and better support the business.

EDITOR: Many people might imagine robberies to be a significant problem. Is that true?

STINDE: If you go back to the late 1970s, our robbery rates were challenging. The company engaged not only some consultants to help them with the problem, but they actually went into the prisons of America and interviewed felons convicted for robbery. They asked them things like "What compelled you" and "Why did you choose one place to rob over another?" Some of the insights that they discovered include how well a store is lit, both inside and outside. How clearly you can see in and out of the store is important. Making sure our associates are aware of and address every guest that comes in. We also determined that it was important to keep cash levels low, because even if a robbery occurs, if that person only gets say $35, they're going to figure out over time to avoid 7-Eleven because we don't have much cash on hand.

EDITOR: How did the 7-Eleven LP team respond when you came in?

STINDE: When I got here, it was clear to me that we had really smart people in the organization who wanted to do great work. One of the things that I pride myself in is trying to cast a good vision. Our goal is very clear if you ask any of them. It's to make 7-Eleven's asset protection team not just best-in-class in convenience stores, but in all of retail.

Day one was an assimilation day before we spent two days talking strategy. In that first discussion, the team sent me out of the room to develop questions. One of the questions was, "Do you have a trailer full of people parked around the corner that you're going to replace us with?" Here's what I told them. The expectations of an asset protection executive in this organization will consist of three things. First, you must be a great leader, be good to people, and work well with others. Second, you must have a strong business acumen; not just asset protection acumen. You have to understand why it's important for the operator to be selling fresh food, understand margin, and understand what a P&L looks like and how to contribute to the P&L. And third, and least important of the goals, shared responsibility, and shared accountability. To get there you have to both understand what you're trying to accomplish, to make sure everyone buys in and is committed to their role in success, and to make sure we are holding each other accountable for the outcomes.

EDITOR: What are some of the financial and operational accountabilities that asset protection has accepted responsibility for?

STINDE: All our investments require certain return. And that return is distilled down to a performance scorecard. The team is held accountable month to month on what it's going to take to get that financial return. With our P&L and scorecard reviews, there's a very clear understanding that if they don't meet their financial return, that this will impact their performance.

The expectations of an asset protection executive in this organization will consist of three things. First, you must be a great leader, be good to people, and work well with others. Second, you must have a strong business acumen; not just asset protection acumen. You have to understand why it's important for the operator to be selling fresh food, understand margin, and understand what a P&L looks like and how to contribute to the P&L. And third, and least important of the three, is that you are a highly functioning asset protection practitioner.

three, is that you are a highly functioning asset protection practitioner. If you have all those things, I have no need to replace you because you have all the skills to do a great job.

I also stressed the need to not only develop a partnership within the AP organization, but within the corporate organization. Early on in my career, I learned to distinguish between a relationship and a partnership. You can have a relationship with someone, and yet you're not always mutually committed to the resolution of something. For me a partnership consists of shared EDITOR: What's changed over the past three years with the asset protection program at 7-Eleven?

STINDE: When I came into the organization, during that first meeting with the team, we took an article out of LP Magazine that talked about the nine consistent attributes of best-in-class loss prevention programs [see "Lessons from Low-Shrink Retailers," September-October 2007 page 56]. During those two days, we went through that list of nine things, working together asking, "What are the actions we need to take to get from where we are today to best-in-class?" We really had some honest conversations about where we were as an organization, and that was the genesis of our new strategy for the department. I challenged the team to focus, not on what others could do for us to make us best-in-class, but what we could do independently as a department to get there.

EDITOR: What were some of those key LP initiatives that you implemented?

STINDE: I believe in trying to make it as simple as you can, so as a team, we tried to take that nine-element approach and distill it down to determine what it would look like in 7-Eleven. We came up with what we call our "four-pillar strategy," which starts with people and ends with people.

We start with the foundation of our strategy, which is the asset protection team. This team consists of all of our key team members, which begins with the associate who interfaces with our guests day to day. The team includes the franchisees and store operators, the field operations team, the store support center; really each and every member of the 7-Eleven team. Each team member most know their role in keeping our stores safe and minimizing loss in our stores.

The first pillar is what we call revenue-and-profit assurance, which is focused on making sure that what gets reported in the stores, whether it be a sales number, a profit number, a mark down, or a write off, is all reported correctly.

The second pillar is what we call our inventory variation control. Most companies would call that shrink control. But for us, any variance says there's something wrong in the business that needs to be identified and corrected. This means the team is focused as much on overage as they are on shortage in the stores.

The third pillar of the strategy—incidents and investigations—is not only investigating, but really doing the work on the back side of that to understand what occurred and what mitigation strategies we need to put in place to either engineer out the risk for the future or put in operational controls to control the risk.

And then the last pillar is safety and asset protection awareness. That's making sure that we engage our associates on what it is they need to do that will keep them safe and prevent loss. We distribute monthly posters to our stores that tell the story from a safety perspective, from a fraud perspective, and from an operational loss perspective. We look at the different components of the business so the associates in the stores, every day, can learn to better control those areas of the business.

EDITOR: What was the greatest adjustment you had to make to manage risk at a convenience store?

STINDE: We have 1,000 customers a day come into an average store, 24 hours a day, at five dollars a transaction, so you have to look at that kind of business differently than a lower velocity business. Plus, being open overnight adds a myriad of other issues. So I had to adjust, personally, to make sure we built a strategy to fit our specific situation. That's actually one of the nine components of that LP Magazine article. One thing I've emphasized whenever I talk about the 7-Eleven AP strategy is that it isn't my strategy; it's our strategy. We built it together. For example, at first, I had shortage control as the second pillar. The team said, "Oh, no. At 7-Eleven it's got to be inventory variation control." It's a different business. I learned I couldn't just come in and plug-and-play my philosophy of what loss prevention was, because in convenience-store retailing there are unique issues.

EDITOR: How do you measure your success?

STINDE: I think back to my early career, when it was all about stats—how many shoplifters did you catch; how many internal theft cases did you resolve? While all of those do have some contribution to the financial success of the company, if that's the only place you find value in your program, you're missing the mark. We can't just be a cost center in the organization; we really should be an income center. Also, you have to consider if asset protection in any way negatively impacts the customer experience in the store. Are there unintended circumstances where we might win financially in the program itself, but lose somewhere else? So, you have to look at it with an all-inclusive lens, trying to better understand the value of the program as a whole.

EDITOR: What technologies have you adopted in your time at 7-Eleven?

STINDE: One of the nine elements in that best-in-class article was using data to drive decisions. The asset protection group lacked the data needed to support the business. For example, we didn't do any exception reporting. So, we purchased a new state-of-the-art exception-based reporting system called Secure™ from Sysrepublic. This system integrates our ClickIt DVR technology that we engaged Tyco Integrated Solutions to deploy in 2012. The Secure system also is integrated into our APIS case management system. Each technology improvement provides great value to our program, but the effective integration of all of these tools is really what makes the system powerful and adds value.

EDITOR: What have you done with it?

STINDE: The nice thing about the Secure system is the ability to integrate to any type of data that we need to bring in. We bring in Oracle feeds, mainframe feeds, and flat-file feeds. It's flexible enough to take any data source, map it to our database, and run exceptions on the data.

We had opportunities to automate our case-management process, which had previously been merely a manila file folder in the file cabinet or document stored on the desktop of the computer. APIS enabled us to now track incidents and cases all the way from cradle to grave.

Many of our stores were still using out-of-date VHS video technology...if you can say "VHS" and "technology" in the same sentence. Bringing all of our stores into a digital video format was a huge investment. But we worked with senior leadership and last year spent $40 million on new digital video technology for stores. This did not include the nearly $10 million we spent in new stores and acquisitions. We're about to embark on another phase of DVR upgrades later this year.

We made sure that all these new technologies were compatible with each other and were able to integrate together. The real power of this technology is to have these systems all working together.

EDITOR: How did you deploy your digital video?

STINDE: First of all, I have to recognize Tyco Integrated Security, who did a flawless job on the integration of 4,000 systems in nine months in our stores, which was a Herculean effort. We have two IP cameras in every store. That may sound like a small number, but we're a small format store. One of them is a 360-degree camera, and one is a 180-degree analytics camera at the front door. We have the ability to measure traffic, dwell time, and other analytics from the systems. Not only do we have remote access to the systems, but we have integrated this video into our Secure exception-reporting system.

EDITOR: Is anyone inside the company outside of asset protection making use of that information?

STINDE: Absolutely. The customer insights team, the innovations team, the new store design team have all tapped into it. There are many examples of how we are putting this valuable data to use to better understand our stores and our guests.

EDITOR: What do you see as the vision in the next 12 to 18 months?

STINDE: We always have to stay vigilant to some of our key robbery-prevention procedures because of the fact that we operate 24/7 in all different parts of the country. We will continue to focus on safety. Can we do a better job when we design a store? Operationally, can we put better standards in the store?

We're also still in the very early stages of what we can do with data. We're doing a great job around the point of sale, but what additional things can we do around some of the other components in the business?

Then, how do we bring in some of the best practices from the larger LP industry? How do we leverage our RILA, NRE, and FMI partnerships to learn from what other folks are doing in our space? And even if they're not doing it in the convenience-store space, how can we take what others are doing outside convenience and adjust it to meet a need within our business?

EDITOR: Are there any other programs that are important to your asset protection organization?

STINDE: We see law enforcement as partners in the stores. For example, we try to be that beacon in the night for the law enforcement officer who wants to come in and get a cup of coffee and do a report, which gives our stores a good visual deterrent at the same time. We are very proud of our Operation Chill program. This program gives us the ability to engage two very important groups—law enforcement and youth. 7-Eleven donates one million Operation Chill Slurpee coupons annually to law enforcement agencies in the communities we serve. The law enforcement officer is to “catch” a young person in the act of doing something good and then reward them with an Operation Chill coupon that can be redeemed for a Slurpee. This is a huge hit with our guests and with our law enforcement partners.

EDITOR: It's obvious from this discussion that you've developed into a strong LP executive. What one or two people have been most influential in your professional development?

STINDE: The first person who really lit the fire under me as a young loss prevention practitioner was Mark Thomas, my regional asset protection manager at Mervyns. He encouraged me that every day I came into the store to ask the store manager what the sales were for the day before. To talk to the assistant managers to find out the challenges they were dealing with and how you could support them. He taught me from the start how important it was to be that cross-functional partner. I also learned a lot from Ed Wolfe when I was at Home Depot. He's a guy who always stood for quality in his organization, and he promoted me to my first divisional director role. But truthfully, I learned more about what it takes to run an effective loss prevention program in the eighteen months I worked for Bill Titus at Sears than I learned anywhere else.

EDITOR: Finally, I know that family is an important part of your life.

STINDE: Yes, my family and my faith have been very important to me throughout my life. I am more committed to each of these in recent years, and my wife and I are very involved in a local Christian church. There are a lot of people who have helped me along the way. The principles I learned as a young child growing up in the church are things that I try to apply every day in both my personal and professional life. My wife Niki and I will be married three years next October. I have two beautiful children, Katelyn, who is 24 and lives in the Seattle area, and a two-year-old, Connor, who is my wingman. Katelyn graduated from the University of Puget Sound and followed her dad into retail at Target. I am very blessed in so many ways. ■

Early on in my career, I learned to distinguish between a relationship and a partnership.

You can have a relationship with someone, and yet you're not always mutually committed to the resolution of something. For me a partnership consists of shared goals, shared responsibility, and shared accountability. To get there you have to both understand what you're trying to accomplish, to make sure everyone buys in and is committed to their role in success, and to make sure we are holding each other accountable for the outcomes.

CRIME DETERRENCE PROGRAM

An overview of 7-Eleven stores' program to provide a safe shopping and working environment

For more than 80 Years, 7-Eleven has been America's neighborhood food store, bringing convenience into the lives of millions. As part of its commitment to the communities it serves and its neighborhood store employees, the company has put in place one of the most comprehensive crime-deterrence programs in the convenience store industry.

7-Eleven developed and implemented its robbery and violence deterrence program in 1975-76, based on research interviews with convicted robbers. The program has been continually updated with ongoing research. 7-Eleven's crime-deterrence program is based on four primary components of visibility into and out of the stores, lighting, effective cash control, and store-personnel training. Additionally, 7-Eleven has installed video surveillance systems in its stores.

"OPERATION ALERT" TRAINING

7-Eleven corporate-store employees and new franchisees participate in a multimedia training program and are supplied with comprehensive resource materials on crime deterrence and violence avoidance.

The program, called "Operation Alert", includes information on security procedures, proper store maintenance, violence avoidance and recommended behaviors for managing a robbery or other potentially violent encounter.

The training emphasizes the high value the company places on the safety of all 7-Eleven store personnel and customers, and 7-Eleven's no-resistance philosophy toward robbery. At 7-Eleven, the safety of store personnel and customers is more important than protecting the company's money or property during a robbery.

THE "FISHBOWL"

Research indicates that robbers do not like stores that are brightly lit, with store staffers and cash registers clearly visible from the street. That is why 7-Eleven puts the cash register in the front of the stores and keeps windows in front of the sales area free of signs and merchandise so police and others can see inside. It's called the "fishbowl" effect because store employees are on display for passersby, including police, to see. As part of a nationwide remodeling program, the company installed bright interior and exterior lighting.

TIMED-ACCESS SAFES

Research also shows that keeping less than $50 in the cash register deters 80 percent of potential robbers. Most robbers say the "risk" is greater than the "take" for that small amount of money.

7-Eleven store employees are instructed to keep no more than $50 ($30 at night) in the cash register. Signs notify would-be robbers that less than $30 is kept in the cash register after dark and that the store staffers cannot open the safe. All 7-Eleven stores use a Timed-Access Cash Controller to keep a minimal amount of money in the register yet still serve customers efficiently.

One section of the timed-access safe contains a locked drop-safe where large bills and checks are deposited by the clerk. Another section dispenses change (coins or bills) only at predetermined time intervals.

STATE-OF-THE-ART VIDEO CAMERA SYSTEMS

7-Eleven has spent millions of dollars to install and maintain state-of-the-art video camera systems and alarms in its stores nationwide. This system includes a 24-hour, closed-circuit video camera with audio capabilities and a high-resolution color monitor mounted in clear view of the customers. The alarm system includes fixed and remote-activator devices.

FACTS

The robbery rate at 7-Eleven stores has decreased by 65 percent since 7-Eleven's robbery deterrence program was implemented in 1976.

7-Eleven is recognized in the convenience store industry and by many law enforcement agencies as the first major retailer to institute a formal crime deterrence program nationwide.

7-Eleven's Operation Alert Training Program has been certified/approved in several states.

HISTORY OF 7-ELEVEN'S ROBBERY DETERRENCE PROGRAM

1975 – The Western Behavioral Sciences Institute, in conjunction with 7-Eleven stores, conducted a robbery deterrence study with a grant from the U.S. Department of Justice. In the test stores, robbery deterrence measures recommended by robbers were implemented in order to determine their impact on crime. These steps included training employees in robbery deterrence, reducing available cash and removing signs from store windows. The result was a 30 percent decrease in robberies in the test stores.

1976 - A six-month follow-up study in Houston indicated the same 30 percent decrease in robberies. The message was that robbers steal for cash, and if stores reduce their cash availability and publicize it, they can deter robberies. The robbery deterrence program – including training for store personnel, cash management, additional field staff security managers, posters, signs and decals – was adopted companywide.

1980 – A study for 7-Eleven by Athena Research Corporation (Athena) found that security cameras and alarms did not reduce the robbery rate in the experimental stores. 7-Eleven began installation of timed-access cash controller safes in its stores.

1985 – 7-Eleven supported a survey by Athena of armed robbers in prison. The results indicated robbers still looked for the same things in stores targeted for robbery – cash availability and visibility into and out of the stores.

1991 – One part of a three-part study by the National Associations of Convenience Stores showed robbery decreased in the first year after installation of high-resolution, closed-circuit television systems and alarms.

1993 – 7-Eleven began nationwide installation of closed-circuit television systems and alarms in its stores as part of its nationwide remodeling program.

1995 – Athena conducted new research of armed robbers in prison to update its 1985 study, which indicated robbers still looked for the same factors.

1996 – 7-Eleven completed a nationwide installation of closed-circuit television systems and alarms in its stores. The company updated its robbery deterrence/violence avoidance training program for store personnel.

2003 – 7-Eleven supported a survey by Athena of teenage robbers to see if the younger robbers looked at things differently than the adult robbers. The study found that they look at the target and security measures in essentially the same way, with escape route and money being the most important factors.

2004 – The Operation Alert training program was updated including computer-based training for all stores.

2005 – 7-Eleven began installing new safes with high-speed bill acceptors and additional security and accountability features.

2007 – “Operation Alert” training, including visibility, lighting and cash control, has been reemphasized in all of its stores.

GUESSING'S HARD...
THAT'S WHY WE CARD.

Unfortunately, people don't come equipped with ages on their foreheads!

As retailers, we have a responsibility to our customers and to our communities to ensure minors do not have access to age-restricted products in our stores...

ENSURING COMPLIANCE WITH REGULATORY REQUIREMENTS

We are pleased to announce the launch of a comprehensive program specifically designed to help you and your employees ensure no minor is able to purchase alcohol or tobacco products from your store. Developed by the Presidents Leadership Council (see attached letter), the elements of the program are:

ID AGE POLICY

Do you know what 27 looks like? Neither do we... so we've made the line a little clearer by changing our ID Age Policy to 30.

"FRESH / REFRESH" ID ZONE POP

How well we communicate our ID practices to our customers can help improve customer service... and there's no reason a serious message can't be delivered with humor. Your October POP kit came with fresh vault decals and a counter mat specifically designed to do both. We plan to refresh your ID Zone POP regularly with messaging that will make the point... and maybe even bring a smile.

MYSTERY SHOPS

One thing that definitely does not bring a smile is a violation for allegedly selling alcohol or tobacco products to a minor. Those come with very serious consequences. To help you and your employees keep your age-restricted product selling skills sharp, you have the opportunity to have your store internally shopped once a month for about $8.00 per shop. See attached "shared cost" National Mystery Shop Program for details.

COME OF AGE AWARENESS BINDER

Of course an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, but what should you do if you receive a violation for allegedly selling alcohol or tobacco products to a minor? You'll find prevention and cure resources in your Come of Age Awareness Binder. We suggest you review and discuss the contents with your employees and keep the binder secure and readily available.

COME OF AGE AWARENESS WEEK

What is Come Of Age Awareness Week? You're experiencing the first one now. It's time set aside once a year for you and your FC - and you and your employees - to sit down together to review and discuss what is... or is not... going right and how you can improve your store's performance with respect to age-restricted product sales and compliance.

ONGOING COMMUNICATIONS

Guessing's hard... that's why we card. When something arrives on this letterhead, you'll know it contains tips and information that will help you and your employees take the guesswork out of the equation and ensure minors are not able to purchase age-restricted products in your store... regardless of the fact that people don't come equipped with ages on their foreheads!

GUESSING'S HARD...
THAT'S WHY WE CARD.

PLC
President's Leadership Council

Dear Franchisees;

Every Franchisee understands the critical importance of adhering to age-restricted product laws and regulations... but no matter how conscientious we are, we can always improve.

In late 2005, our subcommittee – then named the Age-Restricted Product Sales Subcommittee – was charged with developing tools to help stores improve their compliance with age-restricted product laws and regulations; and in May of this year, we presented this program in a comprehensive package of recommendations to 7-Eleven's Executive Team.

While we are proud of this program and know it can make a difference, we also know that it can't make a difference without your support.

During this first Come Of Age Awareness Week and those that follow, we encourage you to take the opportunity to sit down with your FC and discuss the materials in your Come Of Age Awareness Binder and to also take time to review and discuss your store's age-restricted product sales policies and procedures with your employees.

We also encourage you to participate in the monthly National Mystery Shop Program. These shops can help you better and more quickly assess performance issues and training needs in your store – and $8.00 a month is a small price to pay to protect your business.

What's next for our subcommittee? Our work is far from done. While we continue to work on age-restricted product issues, we are expanding our role to include all regulatory issues affecting our stores. Because of this, we have changed our name to Government Affairs and have added several new members to help us: Elias Woldu from Washington, DC, Manjit Purewal from Northern California, and Tariq Khan from New York.

Thanks for your time and attention. Our hope is that you never have the need for any of the Post-Sale Action materials in your Come Of Age Awareness Binder!
